Grab this great opportunity Cuevas del Campo Cuevas del Campo is a small municipality located in the province of Granada, in the Andalusia region, Spain. This municipality is located in the southern part of Spain, near the Sierra de Baza, a mountain range that is part of the larger Betica Mountains. Cuevas del Campo has a picturesque location with a landscape dominated by mountains and natural beauty. Some interesting facts about Cuevas del Campo include: Natural Beauty: The area around Cuevas del Campo is known for its impressive scenery and outdoor opportunities. The nearby Sierra de Baza Natural Park offers wonderful opportunities for hiking, walking and nature lovers. There are numerous trails and routes that allow visitors to enjoy the area's abundant wildlife. Cave houses: The name "Cuevas del Campo" literally means "caves of the field". This name is derived from the fact that the municipality is known for its cave houses, traditional houses carved into the rocks and the ground. Some of these cave houses are still inhabited, while others have been converted into holiday homes or accommodations for tourists. Visiting a cave house is a unique experience and provides insight into the traditional architecture of the region. Culture: Cuevas del Campo has a rich culture and traditions dating back to the Moorish rule in Spain. Locals celebrate various festivals and events throughout the year, including religious festivals and markets that showcase traditional crafts and products. Agriculture and agricultural products: The economy of the municipality is highly dependent on agriculture. Olive growing is an important industry in the area, and the region is known for the production of high quality olive oil. Cuevas del Campo offers visitors a tranquil and natural environment to explore, and it is a great destination for those seeking the beauty of the Andalusian countryside and the charm of traditional Spanish villages. Embalse de Negratin he Embalse de Negratín is an artificial reservoir in southern Spain, located in the province of Granada, in the Andalusia region. The lake was created by the construction of the Negratín Dam, which stops the Guadalquivir River and some of its tributaries. The main function of this reservoir is to retain water for irrigation, drinking water, and electricity generation. Here are some important features and facts related to the Embalse de Negratín: Size: The reservoir is quite large, with a surface area of approximately 8,000 hectares and a maximum water depth of approximately 80 meters. Irrigation: The water of the reservoir is used for irrigation purposes in the surrounding agricultural areas, which is of great importance for agricultural production in the region. Drinking water: It also provides drinking water to the surrounding communities and towns. Electricity Generation: The Negratín Dam has a hydroelectric power plant that generates electricity from the flow of water. This contributes to the energy supply in the region. Recreation: The reservoir is also popular with tourists and locals for recreational activities such as swimming, fishing, sailing and kayaking. The surrounding landscapes are impressive, and the lake itself offers opportunities for water sports. Environment: However, the construction of reservoirs often has an impact on the environment as they affect natural ecosystems. The change in water level and the presence of the dam have consequences for the local flora and fauna. The Embalse de Negratín is therefore of great importance to the region, both economically and recreationally. It provides water sources for agriculture and drinking water, contributes to the energy supply and offers opportunities for recreation and tourism in a beautiful natural environment. Parc Naturel Siera de Castril: The Sierra de Castril Natural Park is a protected natural area located in the southeast of Spain, in the province of Granada, in the Andalusia region.
