Costa Blanca South, Torrevieja (Town)

Furnished ground-floor bungalow in the La Torreta area, designed for those who want to live close to the sea in peace and quiet, enjoying a simple, bright, and very Mediterranean lifestyle. From the moment you approach, you'll notice that this isn't just any ordinary home, but a small haven prepared for disconnecting from the noise, taking advantage of Torrevieja's wonderful climate, and having your own space where every corner can truly be enjoyed. La Veleta is one of those areas that blends residential tranquility with the privilege of being just steps from the sea, the promenade, and essential services, and this bungalow fits perfectly with that lifestyle. The terrace is the home's defining feature. It's the place where the day begins and ends: in the morning, with a coffee in hand, the aroma of breakfast, and the soft light that streams in as the neighborhood awakens; in the afternoon, as a relaxing spot after the beach, with a refreshing drink, some soft music, and the breeze that blows in from the nearby sea. It's easy to imagine a table with a couple of comfortable chairs, some plants, perhaps a small chill-out area with cushions or low armchairs, creating a welcoming atmosphere where you want to sit and chat, work on your laptop, or simply let time slip by. Upon entering, the living area feels warm and functional. The open-plan kitchen seamlessly integrates with the living area, allowing everything to happen in the same space: cooking while chatting, watching a show, helping the children with their homework, or sharing a quick snack with friends. This sense of open space makes the house seem larger than it is, allows light to flow more freely, and makes daily life much more practical. Anyone in the kitchen never feels isolated, but rather part of the heart of the home. The living area invites you to decorate it according to your style. A comfortable sofa, a coffee table, perhaps a bookshelf, a few plants, and personal touches that tell your story; all of this contributes to making this space the social heart of the bungalow. This is where you'll find cozy evenings with a movie and a blanket, nights of board games, video calls with family, or long chats that stretch on without a glance at the clock. The visual connection to the terrace means you can open the door and seamlessly blend indoors and outdoors when the weather is nice, creating almost a single, continuous space. The open-plan kitchen, fully furnished and ready to use, allows for easy movement and keeps everything within easy reach. It's the place where small daily rituals begin: a quick breakfast before heading out, packing lunches, impromptu meals with fresh market produce, or those simple dinners that taste like summer, even in winter. The open layout allows you to keep an eye on everything happening in the house while you cook: listen to the conversation in the living room, keep an eye on the children, or watch a show in the background. Cooking here becomes a natural activity, integrated into daily life, not an isolated moment. The gallery adds an important extra layer of functionality. It's that separate space where you can put the washing machine, cleaning supplies, hang laundry discreetly, or store things you don't want on display. Having this separate corner frees up the rest of the house from clutter, helps everything look tidier, and makes daily tasks more manageable. In a ground-floor bungalow, having a utility room makes all the difference between a merely pretty home and one that's truly easy to maintain. The two bedrooms make this bungalow a very flexible option. The master bedroom lends itself to being a peaceful retreat, a place to truly relax after a day of work, the beach, or errands. It's easy to imagine a spacious bed, soft textiles, light-filtering curtains, and décor that invites you to unwind.
